All ENLASO project managers are tuned into the nuances of cultural diversity and come from a variety of backgrounds. To support them, ENLASO also retains several on-demand project managers; for very large projects, several project coordinators may be involved, as well, to ensure on time, quality delivery of your product.

Your dedicated project manager is your primary point of contact throughout the project life cycle, and beyond. His/her chief responsibilities are analyzing and documenting project and business requirements, communicating project status as mutually agreed upon, developing and managing the project schedule, coordinating all project resources, and delivering final quality translations on time, and within budget.

Your project manager will also work together with you on any number of challenges that may come up during the course of a project, be it identifying which Spanish or French flavor is most appropriate for your target audience, to how we can best help you to manage your In-Country Review, to whether it would be prudent to involve any of our consultants prior to project start.
